

We started March where we left off at the end of February with strong bids in Treasuries on uncertain policies and potential slow growth ahead. The March Federal Reserve meeting did little to change the market's opinion as Chairman Powell emphasized how "Uncertainty around the economic outlook has increased." He went on to say uncertainty 16 times in the press conference. Hopefully we will get more clarity on tariffs on April 2. While the market is still pricing in two rate cuts for 2025, Chairman Powell and many other Fed speakers continue to say they are not in a hurry. Time will tell and in the meantime, we continue to be active in creating bond ladders that yield 4.75-5.25% with a mix of Corporates, CD's, Treasuries and Hybrid Preferreds with fixed floor coupons with around 5-year average life.

Tax-exempt yields surged higher during March as investors struggled to find clear direction from policy initiatives coming from the new administration. The entire tax-exempt yield curve shifted higher by 30-40 basis points. The intermediate part of the curve (maturities +/- 10 years) showed the biggest yield movements while shorter dated maturities posted the smallest increases. Additionally, tax-exempt bonds continued to cheapen versus Treasury bonds (defined as the ratio of tax-exempt yield versus corresponding Treasury bond yield). Secondary offerings by dealers are near record levels as we close the month, an indication of weaker investor demand in the current environment. The benchmark AAA 10-year tax-exempt yield is being quoted at 3.26%, an increase of 40 basis points over the February closing yield quote, according to information provided by Bloomberg.
